Part A: General Information

1. Introduction

“Tsoy” in Dzongkha is scientifically known as Rubia cordifolia. It is also known by different dialects such as Laniru in Sharshop, Majito in Lhotsampa and Indian Madder in English. It belongs to Rubiaceae family. There are sixty different species belonging to genus Rubia in the world and of that five species are found in Bhutan according to “Flora of Bhutan”. It’s a climbing perennial herb with stem normally up to 10 meter long with woody long roots and thin red barks. The stem is branched with long internodes.

Rubia has an extremely large area of distribution, ranging from Africa to tropical Asia, China, Japan and Australia and has a wide ecological adaptability. It is widely distributed in secondary and disturbed habitats and found in forest edges and clearings and scrub vegetation while it is less common in the grass land or open and rocky areas. It is found from sea level up to 2600 m altitude but in Bhutan it is commonly found.

Rubia stems are used as a red dye and its roots for medicinal purpose. Its medicinal properties are mainly found in roots. Rubia cordifolia produces a great range of fast red colour and its roots are an important ingredient of many Ayurvedic preparations and considered very effective in purifying blood.

In the past, roots were exported to United Kingdom. Presently its market is confined to northern India and surrounding countries but only small amounts powdered Indian Madder for dying is exported to Europe, North America and Japan.

However, the harvesting of resources is done based on traditional harvesting methods without integration of scientific management system. With such indistinct, vague, and improper harvesting guidelines, the resource is heading towards margin of extinction thereby making the species a matter of concern for most of the conservationists.

Therefore, on realization of its value and to maintain the sustainability of resources where Bhutanese community can reap the benefit out of this resources, Rubia cordifolia Management and Marketing Group is formed at Lengkhar village under Khamdang Gewog.

2. Goals and Objectives

- Sustainable management of Rubia cordifolia protecting from the illicit collection.
- Income generation from the sale of Rubia cordifolia.

4. Harvesting prescriptions for sustainable NWFP harvesting

The management and marketing group for Rubia cordifolia is for sustainable management of the species and to protect the species from over harvesting. Therefore, to maintain the sustainability of the species, following prescriptions (Table 2) shall be strictly followed by the group members while harvesting. One member from each households shall be involved in the harvesting/collection of the species.

As per the Guidelines for resource assessment and management of Rubia cordifolia, rotational harvesting is recommended for the sustainable management of the species. The collection sites shall be sub divided into five harvesting area where by the group members will harvest about 740 kg per year. So, the harvesting of Tsoy in the first year will be collected from Gyelpodur and Dumbu areas with an estimated quantity of 740 kg. In the second year, the members will explore in Shabum area followed by Jatan and Nam Nay in the third year. The harvest for the fourth and fifth year will be from Dardoshong and Buyang areas. The total quantity estimated for the entire plan period is 3700 kg.

5. Map showing the harvesting area

Sketch map of the NWFP harvesting area (based on traditional boundaries, customary practices and availability of NWFP resources) is provided below (Figure 1):

- The collection areas are as shown below on the map and whole area could not be measured under collection area as Rubia cordifolia are mostly found in the below mentioned areas only.
- Harvesting areas indicated by local names are shown in the map.
- It has 323.5 hectares of harvesting areas.
- Most of the plants are small as mature plants were already illegally collected and there is only about 3700 kg of Rubia cordifolia that can be collected.
- Most of the collection areas lies within 3 hours walking distance from the village.

6. Marketing and sales plan

The collected stem of “Tsoy” or Rubia cordifolia will be sold to Samdrup Jongkhar and to the nearest Indian border by the group which ever fetch better price. Other option is, the product will be auctioned to the local dealers who ever is willing to pay better price. The demarcated area has a potential of producing approximately 740kg of Rubia per year and the price would be decided according to the market rate.

Table 3. Marketing and sales plan

The compensation fee for the coordinator shall be paid from the community development fund and the transportation cost will be borne by members equally.

8. Benefits to the members

The cost of the product would be paid to each member according to the quantity of produce they collected and contributed to the group after deducting 5% of the total sale of each member. The deducted 5% of total sale will be deposited in the community development fund.
